

Travelling to God

God is the destination. Faith is the fuel. Religion is the mode of transport.

Some people steadily drive to their destination never running out of fuel.

Some run out of fuel but replenish, then continue forwards; Some don't.

Some become uncomfortable in their mode of transport so change it, but they keep moving closer to their destination. Even then, they may run out of fuel and will need to replenish. Or not.

Some try various modes of transport as they journey forward. Perhaps never feeling 100% comfortable. Nevertheless, they know they want to keep moving towards the destination, so keep trying. They have enough fuel, but unsure which mode of transport serves best.

Does it matter how we travel? Does it matter how others travel? Do you not wave as the train passes? Or to the man on horseback?

Sometimes we yearn for company as we travel. Sometimes our loved ones come with us. Sometimes they travel separately, or not at all.

Will you travel? How? I'm still travelling.